Max and Anesti enter a long-abandoned large stone house in the most dilapidated part of Heraklion's old town, to the annoyance of the scattering stray cat occupants. The area had been the most notorious place on the Greek island of Crete for one hundred years. Max, a Visual artist from Australia has been wanting to claim the house as his own for months. After much pushing, Anesti, his partner agrees to take on the challenge with little previous renovation experience. With no money but big ideas, Max begins the process of renovation with the plan to start an artist's residency. Along with the house renovation, he sets forth to bring life back to the neglected area called Lakkos, which in Greek means 'pit.'

After helping a Bangladeshi family rebuild their bombed-out Mini Market, Max gets a taste for community projects. Partnering with local politicians, residents and artists, they run numerous events to revitalise the forgotten area. With the foreign artists comes street art, music, and all kinds of contemporary art. Over the next five years, all kinds of crazy, lovely, and difficult artists come to stay in the crumbling house and local Greeks pop in and out with their flair for the dramatic. Drama mixes with comedy at every level. The stories take a light look into Greek life from every level and mix it with the most interesting international artists, often with hilarious results.
