

Baseball Big Apple Battles And The Yankees Mets 2000 World Classic

Every baseball fan's dream is to witness their team compete in a World Series, but to witness a subway series between two New York teams is a once-in-a-lifetime event. The Yankee-Met rivalry has always been intense, but it reached its pinnacle in the year 2000 when the New York Yankees and the New York Mets faced off in the World Classic. This article will take you back to the thrilling baseball battles of the big apple and the historic subway series of 2000.

The Yankees and the Mets had a long-standing rivalry even before the 2000 World Classic. The Yankees represented the American League and had an illustrious history with 25 World Series championships under their belt. On the other hand, the Mets represented the National League and had their fair share of success, with two World Series championships of their own.

The 2000 season was especially exciting for both teams. The Yankees, led by their manager Joe Torre, were the defending champions, having won the World Series in 1998 and 1999. With a star-studded lineup consisting of Derek Jeter, Jorge Posada, and Mariano Rivera, the Yankees were looking to make history by becoming the first team to win three consecutive championships since the 1972-1974 Oakland Athletics.

Game 4 was an intense battle, with the Mets looking to avoid a sweep. The game went into extra innings, and it was Mike Piazza who became the hero, hitting a walk-off home run in the 12th inning, securing a win for the Mets.

As the series moved back to Yankee Stadium for Game 5, the Yankees were just one win away from their third consecutive championship. The game was a nail-biter, going into extra innings once again. It was in the 12th inning that the Yankees' backup catcher, Jose Vizcaino, hit a game-winning single, securing the victory and the championship for the Yankees.
