Suddenly, through birthing a daughter, a woman finds herself face to face not only with an infant, a little girl, a woman-to-be, but also with her own unresolved conflicts from the past and her hopes and dreams for the future. As though experiencing an earthquake, mothers of daughters may find their lives shifted, their deep feelings unearthed, the balance struck in all relationships once again off kilter.

~Elizabeth Debold

Born in the 21st Century on the 24th of February 1985, Nosipho Mashologu has only wished for one thing, and that is a peaceful life. She grew up in one of the largest townships in Cape Town called Gugulethu, with her two siblings, an older brother, Raymond Mbem and her twin, Siphokazi Mbem. The family seems like a well-off family that is respected in the community but it is also not very popular. Nosipho finds herself battling with her upbringing. She knows it's not normal but later concludes that this is maybe how married couples behave. The constant heated arguments, would often result in physical fights between her parents and she, the referee in the boxing ring.

In the midst of all that is happening around her, in her family, at school and in the community, Nosipho is a top A student. This is where she escapes to, her books. She finds the joy and the peace she longs for through reading and studying, therefore she excels at school. The University of Cape Town accepts her for the BA in Film and Media Production course. This is the moment that would change her life either for the better or for the worse. In as much as she has been doing well in her Primary and High school years, she finds herself struggling in the first semester of the year. New environment, new friends, peer pressure and a cold home. Nosipho finds herself doing things, she never might have thought of doing and stares near-rape in the face. She also teaches dance and life-skills to young girls in her community, but she still had a void that needed to be filled and she still longed for that tranquillity.

Eventually, she finds it. It comes and it fits into her heart like a hand does to a glove. The peace she feels is so surreal because all that she experienced as a child and still does, has no effect on her. Well, at least that's what she thinks. Little does Nosipho know that in order to get to the place of peace and building that dream family, she will have to fight a little harder...a little longer. She is broken but she will not let it define her.
