

China And Iran: Parallel History Future Threat

China and Iran, two ancient civilizations that have shaped the world in many ways, are not only linked by a shared history but also by the potential to become future threats on the global stage. As we delve into their parallel histories, we can identify the aspects that might lead to a concerning alliance, raising questions about the stability of the world order.

The Historical Interplay

The relationship between China and Iran has evolved over millennia, with various interactions shaping their common trajectories. Both countries boast rich histories, marked by innovations, cultural advancements, and territorial expansion. From the ancient Silk Road connecting the two civilizations to the formation of the Persian Empire, their parallel paths have witnessed ups and downs, alliances and conflicts.

During the 13th century, the Mongol Empire conquered both China and Persia, establishing a connection that proved influential in shaping the future of these nations. The centuries that followed saw the rise and fall of powerful dynasties in China and Persia, as well as their encounters with external powers.

Fast forward to the modern era, where China has become a global economic powerhouse and Iran has emerged as a regional power in the Middle East. Both countries have faced unique challenges, from political turbulence to economic disparities, and have employed distinct strategies to overcome them.

A Potential Alliance

Looking towards the future, the potential alliance between China and Iran poses a significant concern for the international community. While China seeks to expand its influence globally, Iran aims to establish hegemony in the region. Their shared interests in resources, geopolitical positioning, and opposition to the Western world could create a formidable force.

China's Belt and Road Initiative, aimed at enhancing connectivity and economic cooperation with partner countries, includes infrastructure projects that span across Western China, Central Asia, and the Middle East, including Iran. This initiative, coupled with Iran's valuable energy resources and strategic location, could lead to a strengthened alliance that challenges the existing balance of power.

The Implications

The potential alliance between China and Iran could have far-reaching implications worldwide. Economically, China's investments in Iran could provide the latter with much-needed capital, technology, and support, enabling Iran to strengthen its economy despite international sanctions. This, in turn, would increase China's influence in key regions and potentially disrupt the current global economic order.

Geopolitically, an alliance between China and Iran could lead to a shift in power dynamics, with potential consequences for global security. China's military capabilities combined with Iran's regional influence could destabilize the already volatile Middle East. Moreover, an alliance may embolden Iran, giving it more confidence to challenge Western powers and pursue its nuclear ambitions.

Additionally, the parallel histories of both countries emphasize a common denominator - the desire for global dominance and a desire to shape the world order. China's historical aspiration to be the Middle Kingdom and Iran's historical desire to establish an empire reflect their mutual ambitions. Fueled by their shared visions, an alliance between the two could present a formidable challenge to the current global order.

As we navigate the complex global landscape, it is essential to recognize the potential threats that may arise from historical parallelism. The shared history between China and Iran, coupled with their individual aspirations for influence and dominance, highlight the need for vigilance and proactive measures to ensure the maintenance of global stability.

The possible alliance between China and Iran, driven by economic interests, geopolitical motivations, and common opposition to Western powers, should be closely monitored. As the world evolves, safeguarding the global order requires a deep understanding of historical interplays and an unwavering commitment to diplomacy and cooperation.

China and Iran have featured heavily in the news in recent years. China is both a military and an economic superpower with 20% of the world's population; Iran is suspected of developing nuclear weapons and arming terrorists, and sits on the world's second-largest oil and gas reserves. They are also surprisingly close geographically: Iran is only 700 miles across Afghanistan from China's extreme western border. A 25-year, $100 billion deal to supply China with oil and gas and the large number of Chinese companies operating in Iran shows that the two are moving increasingly close in both political and economic terms. But what does this mean for the rest of the world, and especially for 'the West?' Edward Burman examines how the strikingly similar histories of these two ancient civilisations can inform what the likely consequences for the world of an alliance between them might be.
