Global Crossroads:

Memoirs of a Travel Junkie

A die-hard traveler reflects on the myriad cross-cultural conflicts and challenges he has faced in his travels over five continents. From Tanzania to Thailand, Argentina to Australia, Peru to the Philippines, this collection of true stories not only explores the dramatic and often surprising differences between the many people that exist on our planet, but also raises questions about the values we hold, our refusal to change them, the conflicts those values create, and the ensuing violence they generate. The reader will be occasionally shocked, but more often amused, by the rich panorama of experiences, insights, and revelations that this veteran traveler has to offer.

Each story in this eBook has accompanying photographs as well as two audio conversations (short and long) with the author, which supplement the story by providing personal and related anecdotes. Two other 3-minute multimedia clips at the beginning and end of the book complete the interactive experience for the reader/listener.

The ten stories in this collection published by Open Road Books include: Latin Cariño, Hedonists in Oz, T-Shirt Tango, Dog Karma, Mother India, Joggers' Jamboree, Childhood Games, The Beast Within, Red Dust of Singida, and Fruits of Childhood.

Reviews

“Here he goes again ... the world’s most engaging global nomad, telling incredibly true personal stories from his own experiences, yet speaking for—and giving voice to—millions around the globe. Characters like T-shirt vendors emerge in glorious 3D under his peregrinous pen. Storytelling in bite-sized meaty chunks, not just flaky pieces of puff pastry. Damn it, this book makes me feel like I'm standing still!"—Stu Lloyd, author of Hardship Posting: True Tales of an Expat Misadventure in Asia

"The weird world of T-shirt slogans (who dreams up those off-the-wall mantras?), travelling with Mahatma Gandhi (how did he manage that?), musing on the kindness of strangers, or pondering the internationally variable relationship between man and dog, Mo Tejani's travels prove that it's as much whom you meet as where you go. Childhood memories—from growing up in Africa—also come into the picture, but so does that inevitable shock, "my God, I'm getting older," with a generational culture clash when his route up the east coast of Australia collides with the hedonistic approach of today's young travellers."—Tony Wheeler, Founder of Lonely Planet Guide Books

"Mohezin Tejani's new book Global Crossroads is a fitting collection of some of Mo's finest tales from a person who understands a sense of place and his role as a storyteller. Mo manages to be the quiet observer, respectfully capturing the essence of the people and culture, and only leaving his footsteps in the sand. Because of Mo's background as a political refugee, or perhaps in spite of it, his restless spirit is the perfect travel companion."—Cameron Marshall, ABC News commentator, Australia

"East African Asians—of whom the author is one—have no place on earth to call their own. For many that leaves a painful longing, inner dislocation. For Tejani, it is a liberation. He has become an observant nomad, a citizen free of nationalisms and narrow attachments, a man of the world whose experiences, generosity and curiosities are boundless. He belongs, but to himself and humanity, nature and all the gods we know and don't.—Yasmin Alibhai-Brown, The Independent, UK

About the author

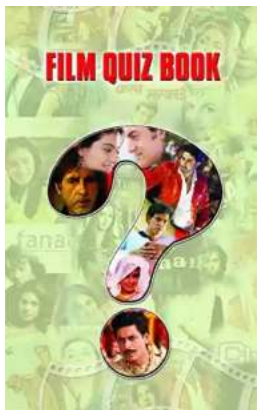

Mohezin Tejani is a global nomad who has been roaming the world for over four decades now. Exiled from Uganda during Idi Amin's reign of terror in the 1970s, he was suddenly left homeless, with little sense of his own cultural identity. He spent the next forty years traveling through all five continents, working with humanitarian agencies and later became an award-winning travel writer.
