The Sonoran desert tortoise is a large and hardy terrestrial turtle found primarily in the Sonoran desert. It is distinguished by its keelless carapace, which ranges in color from gray to orange. When compared to other turtles, its form and shapes are rough, and its plastron is not hinged. The turtle also has elephantine limbs and front feet that resemble shovels – the digits are unwebbed. These turtles' median projection extends from the gular shield, which is the front plastron. Its shell has a maximum length of 15 inches (380 mm). They are distinguished by their dome-shaped shells and growth rings on the top of their shells. As a result, growers all over the world are attempting to raise this turtle.
