From an early age, Heather's compassionate nature led her to volunteer with various local organizations and charities. Whether it was helping at the local food bank or organizing fundraisers for the homeless, Heather always found ways to positively impact her community.

A Passion for Education

After completing her high school education, Heather decided to pursue a degree in social work. She believed that education was the key to not only empowering individuals but also creating lasting social change. Heather immersed herself in her studies, eager to gain the knowledge and skills necessary to make a real difference in people's lives.

During her time in college, Heather actively participated in community initiatives. She organized workshops on mental health awareness, volunteered as a tutor for underprivileged children, and dedicated her time to advocating for equal access to education. Her dedication and commitment earned her recognition and respect from both her peers and professors.

Bringing Change to McMullen Circle

After finishing her education, Heather returned to her beloved hometown of McMullen Circle with a burning desire to bring about meaningful change. She identified key issues that needed attention, such as homelessness and poverty, and set out to address them head-on.

Heather founded the McMullen Circle Community Development Center, a non-profit organization aimed at providing essential resources and support to those in need. From offering temporary shelters to creating job training programs, the center became a beacon of hope for many residents struggling to overcome adversity.

Under Heather's leadership, the center expanded its reach and impact exponentially. Through her tireless efforts, she successfully secured grants and partnerships, allowing the center to grow and provide even more comprehensive services to the community.

An Advocate for Global Change

Heather's influence extended beyond her hometown. Recognizing the interconnectedness of global issues, she actively engaged with international organizations and initiatives. Heather participated in conferences and seminars, sharing her expertise and experiences while gaining valuable insights from other change-makers around the world.

As a respected advocate, Heather diligently worked towards raising awareness about social and environmental issues. She organized events, speaking engagements, and campaigns to mobilize individuals and communities alike, inspiring them to take decisive action for a better future.

The twelve linked stories in McMullen Circle explore the intertwined lives of faculty families at the McMullen Boarding School in Tonola Falls, Georgia in 1969 and 1970. The school community is isolated and idyllic, yet issues of race and the Vietnam War still intrude. Does heroism require physical prowess, or is there valor in a cafeteria worker enduring a cluttered, needy life with her four young sons, or an elderly librarian caring for her disabled lesbian partner? What does it take for a young African American girl to find the courage to assert her right to attend the all-white private school. The stories in this collection ask what, and who, are the real heroes.
