Greed. Excessive or rapacious desire, especially for wealth or possessions. Gluttony. A voracity for overindulgence.

What do you think will happen when two sins revolving around the need for excessive amounts of possessions come together? Not only are the sins one in the same, their hosts couldn't be more different. Lost in the world because of their true identities, Hail and Storm were two fairies who didn't truly know who they were. Their outward physical appearance didn't reflect the darkness they truly felt inside and that caused even more stress and strife in their lives. Afraid of the truth of who they really were, being possessed by a deadly sin only made things worse. Would there be anything that could bring these two fairies out of their dark hole? Will happiness be something they could ever attain or just a wild dream that helped them deal with their own turmoil?
